Community Capacity Building Seminar Series 2009

Aims

Innovation in policy, planning and action is necessary to address complex wellbeing issues such as community safety, childhood development, food security, water quality and the management of chronic disease conditions. Key questions include: How can we develop community settings and service systems which support people's capacity for well being? How can persistent patterns of inequalities in access to opportunities and resources for wellbeing be addressed?

The aim of this series of three seminars is to provide participants with opportunities to explore the practical application of key concepts, research evidence and examples of good practice in community capacity building to their own setting.

SEMINAR ONE
